

City Natives

Find native plants for your community garden plot right in the heart of the city.

City Natives serves as The Trustees' native plant nursery and horticultural learning center, for the people of Boston and beyond. The roughly half-acre site holds a modest greenhouse and nursery where we raise plants native to our local climate. We grow the plants for community garden common areas and for restoration projects throughout the city. The greenhouse doubles as a gardening classroom for our educational programs and for training volunteers.

City Natives is also home to our Learning Garden. Here you can see interpretive garden beds that demonstrate intensive gardening techniques unique to urban and community gardens. Our displays change with the season, so plan to visit us often throughout the growing season!

Our City Natives campus also includes an apiary, native plant display gardens, a wildflower meadow, and a small orchard. Volunteers help us care for and maintain City Natives – please contact us if you'd like to lend a hand.
